“An indispensable history.” Morning Star

The Society for Cultural Relations with the USSR was founded in 1924, seven years after the October Russian Revolution. The book charts its important yet underrated role in the field of British-Soviet relations from the 1920s, through the Second World War and Cold War, to how it adapted to the breakup of the USSR and beyond. Jane Rosen is a librarian, historian and independent researcher with an interest in the Soviet Union.
